Purpose

The Forum identifies, frames, defines, and facilitates discourses on key issues in international criminal and humanitarian law and transitional justice. Matters of interest to the Forum also encompass humanitarian affairs, criminal justice, truth and reconciliation, legal ethics, and other questions surrounding law and related disciplines. Through its activities, the Forum brings together legal academics and practitioners, as well as experts from other fields. It aspires to intellectual leadership and innovation.

The Forum seeks to include interested institutions and individuals in all continents in its activities, in particular those from materially less resourceful countries. To that end, it uses its Internet site to disseminate information about its seminars and provide access to its publications through an open and free platform.

The Forum is a flexible, dynamic and inclusive initiative. Those wishing to collaborate with it are encouraged to propose topics or ideas for joint events for further consideration. The formulation of the agenda is guided by curiosity, a will to challenge the established framing of issues, and a practical sense of community needs. Forum events do not take place at fixed intervals. They are driven by the topicality and scholarly or practical potential of the issues addressed.
